The Intelligencer.

WHEELING, W. VA., SEPTEMBER 5, 1885. THE WHISPERING GALLERY.

If any one of us knew that to-morrow he would be dead, I wonder what he would do to-day? I looked upon a hurrying crowd on a thronged thoroughfare, and this thought came to me. I looked upon a charming little home circle, and the a charming little home circle, and the thought came again. Every day some-body drops out of the crowd and out of the family circle. Some of us live as though we don't care what becomes of us or what people say of us after we are gone—an in-difference which has never made any man good and kind and noble in life, worthy to ected in death and followed to the grave a sorrowing multitude.

The other day I sat in a pretty church that was packed with people. The seats were not enough. Men and women had to stand. Rich and poor, black and white, to stand. Rich and poor, black and white, were there; physicians, lawyers, merchants, mechanics, Jew and geattle. The lewish rabbi sat in this Christian church as a mark of respect to the cold remains that lay before the chancel. It looked as though every condition of Wheeling life was there to say a neighbory farewell. A man must lead a good life to be so followed to the grave. He must inspire confidence and regard, or people will not leave their homes and their business when his last hour has come and gone. He was wise indeed who wrote, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

A quiet man who minds his own business and does a good deal of hard think-ing, said to me, "I don't think the Republlean newspapers are doing the right thing. They are virtually letting the administration's floancial policy alone, when they know it is prolonging the depression and threatening worse times. I understand why the Republican newspapers are doing this, but the end doesn't justify the means. We can't afford to have disaster brought on the country by one party that the other may profit by it. Every newspaper in the Union should sound the alarm. Why look at it! Not a bond called; $40,000,000 added to the nursus; three-eights of the money of the country locked up in the Government vanita and the New York banks. Yes, sir, $600,000,000 doing nobody any good! There is no use in talking about the money that is in the country, when it is not in circulation. It is the business of the Government to help the people, not oding pits for them."

There are many thinking men in this country the doily this public blaces. tion's financial policy alone, when they country who don't fill public places.

I hear a rare and radiant story about Captain Dovener and Lieutenant Alf. Rheinstrom, of the Court House Guards. They were embarked on board the good ship Gienville, Captain Rathbone, buffetsing the billows on the heaving boson of the Little Karawha. They were going a fishing, these dashing land inbbers. They wantet to know of the Captain about the depth of the water and the size of the fish. Seeing he had passengers who were not to be trifled with Captain Rathbone remarked:

"Gentlemen, this live is expose we haven't more than fifty feet, but in half an hour we shall be in deep water. Of course I do not speak now of the holes which have never been fathomed. I remember very well a hole—about a quarter of a mile above here, which seems to have rd of more than one, but I suppose I ould be worth catching. All the men along here know "Tom"—that's what they call him. He'll take your bait and bite off your hook and snap yourline, but you can't catch Tom. There was a man up here last summer who tried it. He got the fish—that is almost got him—when his quarterinch line broke and Tom stayed where he was. Well do you know, that man was so mad that he blazed away at a squirrel over head. Down came little nut-cracker in the water. In popped the squirrel over head. Bown came mue maternates in the water. In popped the faithful dog, caught the rquirrel and was swimming ashere when suddenly he let go his prey, sont up a piceous howl and went down the hole stern end foremost. Tom had got him, and you bette believe that man made tracks away from there."

The Wheeling isherman, I learn, spent a week around that hole trying to get a bite. They say that Captain Rathbone is a sice may
